THREE IMPORTANT DECISIONS.

When a Mercantile Agency is Liable for Its Subscribers' Losses.

[SPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH.]

PHILADELPHIA, April 7.—The Supreme Court to-day made three important decisions. In the suit of Crew, Levick & Co. vs. Bradstreet the Court says that a mercantile agency is not liable for losses occasioned by false information furnished by it, but is liable for losses caused by typographical errors in its reports to subscribers. It was also held that furniture loaned or leased to a boarding house was not exempt from distress on the ground that it was in the house for the purpose of trade.

In the case of Cyrus W. Merriman, of Williamsport, heir to $400,000, the Court refused to break the trust made by the appellant in favor of his wife and children, but said so long as Merriman behaved himself he has the privilege of a home and support.

MUCH LIKE TOPSY.
